ROUNDTABLE DISCUSSION

A Vanishing Century?: The State of 19th Century European Studies

This Roundtable explores from multiple perspectives the often-stated impression that the nineteenth century is “vanishing” from German and European history. It asks how one can explain this trend, what consequences it has for the development of historiography and public historical knowledge, if and why the nineteenth century matters for the present, and what the future of nineteenth-century history might be. Five experts on different regions and historiographical approaches to European history discuss these questions.

Discussion Participants:

- CEMIL AYDEN | UNC-Chapel Hill, Dept. of History | Global History
- DAVID BLACKBOURN | Vanderbilt University, Dept. of History | German Central European History
- CHAD BRYANT | UNC Chapel-Hill, Dept. of History | History of the Habsburg Empire
